Super Bowl XLII

By: Tony Mitterling

It's finally here after 24 weeks of preseason, regular season, and post season games, Super Bowl weekend and everyone is getting ready for the big game. Whether it's for the funny commercials, half time show, or the game, watching the Super Bowl is a must for most people. The question surrounding the big game this year is, "Will the Patriots go 19-0?" With the sure hands of Randy Moss and the defensive leadership of Tedy Bruschi, the Patriots have had a record breaking season. O yeah, and I forgot to mention the so called "perfect" quarterback Tom Brady. It seems as though there is nothing that can go wrong for Coach Belichick and his patriots (Except for that whole "cheating" incident at the beginning of the season). But will Eli Manning and the giants be able to stop the patriots during the big game? The Giants had a rough start losing their first two games and suffering a few injuries during the beginning of the season. Then they were able to bounce back with a six game winning streak with the improvement of the young quarterback Eli Manning and continuing into the season strong. With the height and strength of Plaxico Burress and the pass rushing ability of the entire giants defensive line lead by Michael Strahan, will the Giants be able to stop the Patriots? The pre-game will be on Sunday, February 3 at 5:00 central time. The game is going to be a great matchup and I suggest to everyone to tune in Sunday night and enjoy the game.

"I deal with criticism and praise in the same way. I ignore it."

-Eli Manning
